Capsule Summary

The Chalgrove neighborhood is located in the Park Heights neighborhood of Baltimore, Maryland. It is composed of the area bounded by Belvedere Avenue, Queensberry Avenue, Oakley Avenue, and Pimlico Road. It was built on the grounds of the Gentlemen's Driving Park in two phases, the first in the late 1920s and the second in the late 1930s. Early construction focused on Queensberry Avenue, Oakley Avenue, and Garrison Avenue. Later construction was on Chalgrove, Pembridge, and Woolverton Avenues.

The neighborhood is made up of small, simple brick rowhouses. The rowhouses within this neighborhood were built with daylight rowhouse plans: two-rooms by two-rooms, measuring 20-feet-wide by 36-feet-deep. The two-story structures typically had large front yards and spacious porches. There are four distinct types of rowhouses found within this neighborhood.

Summary

The Chalgrove neighborhood is located in the Park Heights neighborhood of Baltimore, Maryland (Attachment 1). It is composed of the area bounded by Belvedere Avenue, Queensberry Avenue, Oakley Avenue, and Pimlico Road. The neighborhood is made up of small, simple brick rowhouses. The rowhouses within this neighborhood were built with daylight rowhouse plans: two-rooms by two-rooms, measuring 20-feet-wide by 36-feet-deep. The two-story structures typically had large front yards and spacious porches.¹ Four types of rowhouses are found within this neighborhood, as described below.

Comprehensive Description

Type 1

(2800, 2900, and 3000 blocks of Oakley Avenue; 4900, 5000 blocks of Queensberry Avenue; 5100-5116 and 5101-5119 Queensberry Avenue; 2800 block of Garrison Avenue)

Built in the 1920s, the rowhouses along Oakley Avenue, Garrison Avenue, and Queensberry Avenue are of the same type (Figures 1-6). The two-story structures on raised stone basements have a flat roof with parapet walls. They are built of stretcher bond brick with white trim and green tile roofs, typical of the daylight rowhouses built in the Colonial Revival style. Spacious front porches with large front lawns were also characteristic of the style.

The typical rowhouse of this type has three regularly spaced double-hung sash windows on the second story, and two double-hung sash windows and a door on the first story. A single window on the basement-level is visible on the front elevation. Between each house, a raised parapet delineates the property line. All of the houses have a large front porch and a pent roof atop a pressed metal cornice. An internal chimney is visible between each house.

Side elevations of the houses located at the end of each row have two bays. The bay located closest to the front of the house is regularly fenestrated. Two small windows on the first floor are surmounted by a larger double-hung sash window on the second floor. A single basement window is aligned with the second-floor window. The rear bay has two double-hung sash windows on the second floor and a single double-hung sash window on the first floor.

The rear elevations also have two bays. The first bay consists of a paired double-hung window on the second floor surmounting a set of two windows on the first floor. The other bay has a first-floor door flanked by small, double-hung sash windows. A single, double-hung sash window is on the second floor above the door.

Variation in this type includes an enclosed front porch, resulting in a sunlight dayparlor house, which was part of the original design.² Examples of the enclosed porch variety are located at 2816 to 2864, 2901 to 2931, and 3001 to 3021 Oakley Avenue. Further variation related to the enclosed porch includes the use of stone or brick foundations, the presence of a central basement window, and the use of the porch roof as a balcony. In houses with porch balconies, the central window on the second story is replaced with a door. Open porches had either hipped roofs or flat roofs with a variety of supports. Decorative details also vary throughout this type. The lintels on the second floor vary between flat arch, segmental arch, and a continuous soldier course extending across the elevation. Other variation includes cornice ornamentation and sidelight and transom configurations on the front door.

(Odd numbered houses in the 4900 block of Chalgrove Avenue; 5000 and 5100 blocks of Chalgrove Avenue, even numbered houses in the 4900 block of Pembridge Avenue; 5000 block of Pembridge Avenue; 5100-5124 and 5101-5113 Pembridge Avenue; 5107-5121 Woolverton Avenue; 5000 block of Woolverton Avenue)

Built in the 1930s, most of the rowhouses along Chalgrove Avenue, Pembridge Avenue, and Woolverton Avenue feature elements of the Tudor Revival style (Figures 7-10). The two-story structures on raised stone basements have a flat roof with slate shingles on faux gables. Large wall dormers are present between the two end houses and between the two central houses on the longer blocks. The wall dormers are clad with stucco and half-timbering in the Tudor Revival style. The houses without wall dormers have half-timbering on the second story. An internal brick chimney is centered between each house.

The typical rowhouse of this type has a double-hung sash window on the second floor and a double-hung sash window and a door on the first floor. Variation in this fenestration pattern includes the replacement of single windows with paired windows. The 5100 blocks of Pembridge Avenue and Woolverton Avenue have an additional small window adjacent to the door. The 5100 block of Woolverton varies also in the cladding on the second floor, which is brick with stone and wood siding in the wall dormers.

Side elevations of the houses located at the end of a row have three bays that are irregularly fenestrated. There are three windows on each floor except the basement, which has a central door flanked by windows.

The rear elevations have two bays with variations in fenestration. There are two windows on the second floor, and a window and door with a stoop on the first floor. Windows can be paired, double-hung sash, or hopper windows.

The end houses located on the north end of the 5100 block of Chalgrove Avenue are commercial properties facing Belvedere Avenue. 2907 to 2911 Belvedere Avenue abuts 5137 Chalgrove Avenue. It is identical to 2921 to 2925 Belvedere Avenue, which abuts 5119 Queensberry Avenue. These two structures have five bays under a stepped brick parapet. The first and third bays are symmetrical and are composed of two bays each. A large storefront fixed window surmounted by two casement windows forms the inner bays. The outer bays have a single entrance door under a round head arch. The central bay has a double doorway under a round head arch surmounted by a recessed casement window on the second floor. A large blind panel is centered on the parapet, and two vertical blind panels flank the outermost bays. All windows have rowlock course lintels and sills. 2917 Belvedere Avenue abuts 5134 Chalgrove Avenue and has distinct characteristics of the Tudor Revival style, including stuccoed second floors with half-timbering and wall dormers. The central bay is composed of a doorway on the first floor. The two flanking bays have second-story, double-hung sash windows surmounted by gabled wall dormers. Flanking these windows is a single casement window on the second floor. Three herringbone brick panels separate the second-floor fenestration. The first floor fenestration has been augmented. On the east side of the door, a stucco panel features a fixed window. To the west of the central door, a doorway and two large windows have been infilled with decorative concrete blocks.

Type 3

(Odd numbered houses on the 4900 block of Pembridge Avenue, the even numbered houses on the 5100 block of Woolverton Avenue, northern end of the 5100 block of Pembridge Avenue, the even numbered houses on the northern end of the 5100 block of Queensberry Avenue)

Built in the 1930s, the northern portions of the 5100 blocks of Pembridge Avenue and Chalgrove Avenue, and the even numbered houses located at the northern end of the 5100 block of Queensberry Avenue, feature elements of the Tudor Revival style (Figures 11 and 12). The exterior walls surfaces feature brick and stone rubble. The two-story houses have raised basements and flat roofs with faux gables on the front elevation clad in slate shingles. Most of the houses in each row have two bays each; the central house, emphasized by a large wall dormer clad in stone, however, has three bays.

The roofline of the front elevation is interspersed with projecting wall dormers and external stone chimneys. Each house has a projecting wall dormer with horizontal wood siding in the gable. The central houses have a wall dormer that extends the entire width of the house. It is clad in stone rubble on both the first and second stories. The first and second floors are divided by decorative brickwork under the projecting dormer. A single casement window is centered on the second floor. Below it, an entrance door flanked by two double-hung sash windows lights the first floor. All of the houses of this type have stone-clad first floors and brick-clad second floors. One of the two bays has a paired double-hung sash window in the wall dormer above a double-hung sash window on the first floor. The other bay is composed of a small double-hung sash window above the first-floor entrance. The double-hung sash windows on the second floor have brick flat arch lintels and header course sills. Variation in the fenestration pattern occurs, but all houses of this type have two bays. The odd numbered houses on the 4900 block of Pembridge Avenue do not have stone cladding. On this block, the entire front elevation is common bond brick.

The rear elevation is clad in brick and has two bays. One bay consists of a single, double-hung sash window on the second story above a paired double-hung window on the first story. The other bay has a single, double-hung sash window above a rear door with a stoop and hood. A rear, paired, internal chimney is situated between the houses at every second house. Both end houses have single stack internal chimneys.

The end houses of each row are clad in brick. They have two bays each. The first bay, located towards the rear of the structure, has a single, double-hung sash window on the second floor and a paired, double-hung sash window on the first floor above a rectangular basement window. The second bay has two windows on the second floor, and a single, double-hung sash window on the first floor surmounts a basement-level window.

Type 4

(Even numbered houses on the 4900 block of Chalgrove Avenue)

The even numbered houses on the 4900 block of Chalgrove Avenue compose their own type (Figure 13). The two-story brick structures on raised stone basements have a flat roof with parapet walls. They are built of stretcher bond brick with white trim in a style reminiscent of the Colonial Revival.

The typical rowhouse of this type has two regularly spaced double-hung sash windows on the second story, and two double-hung sash windows and a door on the first story. The second-floor windows are united under a belt course laid with soldier brick. The lintels on the first floor consist of a single rowlock course above each. A small basement-level window is visible on the front elevation. Between each house, a raised parapet delineates the property line. All of the houses have a large front porch with a flat roof and a pressed metal cornice with brackets. The porches are stone with varying types of supports. Raised parapet panels separate each house. An internal chimney is located between each house.

Side elevations of the houses located at the end of a row have three bays. The bay located closest to the front of the house has a single double-hung sash window on the first and second floors. An access door to the basement is located below these two windows and has a brick lintel. In the center bay, two double-hung sash windows light the second floor, and a single double-hung window pierces the first floor. The rear bay has a total of four windows, two on the first floor and two on the second floor. One of the first-floor windows is significantly smaller than the other three. All of the windows on this elevation have flat arch lintels and rowlock sills.

The rear elevations have two bays. The first bay consists of a double-hung window on the first and second floors surmounting basement-level access door. The other bay has a double-hung sash window on the second floor and a first floor entry with a stoop.

Summary

The Chalgrove Avenue neighborhood was built on the grounds of the Gentlemen's Driving Park in two phases, the first in the late 1920s and the second in the late 1930s (Attachments 2-4). Early construction focused on Queensberry Avenue, Oakley Avenue, and Garrison Avenue. Later construction was on Chalgrove, Pembridge, and Woolverton Avenues.

History

The area occupied by the Chalgrove Avenue neighborhood has roots dating back to the early 19th century when Baltimore's economy centered on its port and Reistertown Road served as a major transportation route for wheat and corn from inland farms. The area gained fame with the establishment of the Pimlico Race Track in 1870 and the start of the Preakness Stakes in 1873. As streetcar routes were established in the early 20th century along Park Heights and Belvedere Avenues, settlement by European and Jewish immigrants occurred. The Chalgrove Avenue neighborhood was constructed on the grounds of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Club. The club was inaugurated in the autumn of 1887, when Mr. Martin and Mr. McAndrews purchased the old Kilpatrick trotting track in 1887. Mr. Walter B. Brooks was named president. By 1890, the club had 250 members and additional purchases increased the property to 27 acres. The half-mile track was considered one of the fastest in the country. The club featured a members' clubhouse with private dining, a grandstand, stables for 70 trotting horses, sheds for 100 teams, and a greenhouse.³

An early morning fire on March 25, 1922 destroyed the clubhouse, a small cottage, 15 box stalls, and a water tank. The grandstand caught fire several times, but was saved by the firemen. The club was a two-and-a-half-story wood building 100 feet long and 75 feet wide. It was formerly used as a clubhouse and dancing pavilion.⁴

In 1924, it was announced that the remains of the clubhouse and grandstand had been torn down and the land cleared for development. Construction started on 42 two-story daylight brick houses on Oakley and Queensberry Avenues by the builders and owners of the land, Walter L. Westphal & George W. Schoenhals. Plans included the erection of 315 houses of the two-story brick daylight type containing eight rooms and a bath.⁵ Mr. Westphal, a successful developer, had built homes in east and west Baltimore. was engaged in large building developments and loan offices in Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Scranton, Pennsylvania. He died October 3, 1942, but did not have an obituary in the Sun.⁶⁷

Meanwhile, Jacob Mizen was building homes designed by Frederick E. Beall on Oakley Street north of Pimlico School and Garrison Avenue beginning in 1923. William E. Byrd was the seller of these homes.⁸⁹ Jacob Mizen was a prolific builder of homes in Baltimore. He lived at 4013 Park Heights avenue and was the president of the Agudas Achim Ansha Sphard Jewish congregation.¹⁰ Frederick E. Beall, architect, had offices on St. Paul Street for more than 40 years. He designed numerous churches, apartment houses, and homes in Maryland and was a president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society in St. Ambrose Parish.¹¹ William Byrd was banker and practiced law for 64 years beginning in 1905 after graduating from University of Maryland law school and being admitted to the bar.¹²

On December 5, 1925, Westphal and Schoenhals were advertising daylight homes with individual stone porches, steps, and floors located in the 5200 and 5300 blocks of Queensberry Avenue and on April 4, 1926, the company began advertising another block of homes in the 5200 Block of Queensberry Avenue. The latter set of homes were advertised as 8 bright rooms, hot-water heat, hardwood floors, open fireplaces, and bathroom with built-in tub and fixtures, shower, tiled floors and walls. The kitchen was described as large and bright with white enamel walls, Fire King Gas Range, sink, and built-in closet.¹³¹⁴ Aerial photos indicate that all the homes on Garrison Avenue, Calvert Street, Oakley Avenue, and Queensberry Avenue (except for the northernmost short block) were completed by February 24, 1927.¹⁵

Construction on Chalgrove, Pembridge, and Woolverton Avenues was not initiated until the late 1930s. Advertisements on September 20, 1935 and January 3, 1936 offered "fine new English group homes, $2,200 each."¹⁶¹⁷ The homes in the 5000 and 5100 blocks of Chalgrove Avenue included hot water heat, oak floors, built-in tubs, and showers. Advertisements for homes built by United States Construction Corporation on Pembridge began in 1938. They indicated that the homes had large bedrooms, large living rooms, dining rooms, tile baths, hot water heat, hardwood floors, and "every modern convenience."¹⁸ Priced at $2,700, they included shades, screens, and linoleum kitchen floors. The corporation also filed plans on April 20, 1938 for 22 two-story stone and concrete-block dwellings with garages at 5100-5140 Woolverton Avenue.¹⁹

A review of the Baltimore City business directories from 1940 and 1964 indicate that the neighborhood consisted of middle class workers in service or retail jobs, or were skilled craftsmen such as electricians or seamstresses (Tables 1-3). This is consistent with new classes of workers developed during the population boom in Baltimore between 1910 and 1950, and was reflected in the new residential neighborhoods of the time period.^{20,21}

Migration into the area around the Chalgrove Avenue neighborhood continued until it was largely built by the 1950s. Similar to other Baltimore neighborhoods, a major population shift occurred in the area as the white population moved out of the area during the 1970s. According to the 2006 Park Heights Master Plan, the area was largely poor and more than 96 percent African American.²²
